

1628. July 18. PEACOCK against PEACOCKS.

WHERE three executors are confirmed, and one of them, having intromitted with his own third part, departs this life, leaving the other two executors in life; a creditor to the defunct, to whom they were all three, conjunctim, executors, pursues the two executors, in life, for payment of the debt;—it was alleged by them, that the defunct executor who was intromitter with the third part of the executry, ought to be called, or some person to represent him. The Lords found no necessity, except the two executors in life would allege that all their parts of the executry would not suffice to pay the debt.

Compars one, who is made assignee to the donatar of the rebel's escheat and liferent, who had intended a particular declarator of the same farms since the arrestment; and, being admitted for his interest, alleges, He has right to the farms by his assignation. It was answered by the arrester, The assignee can be in no better case nor the cedent; but, so it is, the cedent took the gift to the rebel's behoof. The Lords found the assignee, constituted after the arrestment, was in no better case nor the cedent.
